

Weekly Wednesday Training Feedback – May 2026

Name: Sibongokuhle Bembe

Course Name: Effective Customer Service Skills

Current Status: In Progress

Current Progress: Completed Module 1; currently at the beginning of Module 2 ("Learning Outcomes").

1. Effectiveness of the Training

The training modules covered in Module 1 were highly effective. The course provided a brilliant breakdown of the foundational context of customer services, specifically highlighting the "human element" of transactions, organizational procedures, and the distinction between a customer and a consumer. It was particularly eye-opening to study how consumer attitudes—built on beliefs, feelings, and behavioural intentions—drive brand loyalty and consumption.

2. Application of Learning

I have already begun applying these customer service principles directly to my work on the InspHired platform design. Specifically, understanding the balance between digital efficiencies and the "human element" has heavily influenced how I develop the user interface. When building the website features, I am focusing on creating intuitive user journeys that prevent the typical frustration users face with rigid digital systems. By ensuring the web platform feels supportive, transparent, and easy to navigate, the design actively respects the "human element" of candidates and clients looking for a seamless hiring experience.

3. Impact on Work Output

This training has directly enhanced my approach to full-stack development and UI design. By shift-focusing my daily coding tasks toward the core aim of customer retention, I am designing components for InspHired that prioritize long-term user engagement rather than just basic functionality. Building systems that are user-centric from the start reduces the need for defensive, complex troubleshooting later, leading to cleaner code implementation and a more impactful final product.
